Hi, Deb,

Thank you for the call.

Recapping the meet and confer portion:

Your office has 3 or possibly 4 trials coming up. You were concerned that if you gave us the requested extension, that it would conflict with those trials date-wise. Essentially, we both have extremely tight schedules at the moment – personally and professionally.

I offered to accommodate your trials with corollary or greater extensions (as noted in the email chain below). You said that this would push all of this case too far back with briefings before anything ever got started, and that would prejudice your client.

I asked if you would consider the 30-day extension as a compromise. You said no. You said that you might consider a 2-week extension, but that you couldn't commit to that at the moment. You would have to do the math on the dates to see if you could give that much of an extension without prejudicing your client/conflicting with your trial schedules. I didn't see a point in you doing the math/dates, since 14-days would not work with what we need for an extension.

I indicated that we would be forced to file a motion, and you indicated that was fine and you would oppose.

I attempted to make this an accurate/neutral recap. If you disagree with anything please let us know.

Thanks, Clinton

Clinton Mikel
